The
ALASTAIR CAMPBELL
Interview

Charlie Brooke

Across three incredible series, Black Mirror's paranoid-in-chief reflects society's real living nightmares. Ahead of the fourth anthology of dark satirical dystopia, he reveals what keeps him awake at night.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY Steve Schofield

In the time between meeting and sitting down to start our interview, Charlie Brooker gives the word "weird" about ten times, another half dozen or so and "oddy" a few times too. The close-up for the photoshoot are "weird". The cameras set up to film view are "weird". The chairs on which we sit are "weird".

"I've never made eye contact with anyone for this long," he says on realising how close together our chairs are. "It's weird!" When someone asks if we want breakfast, he fills me in on his diet - he only eats between noon and 8pm.

The days leading up to our interview have been quiet for me too. To the horror of my daughter, who loves Black Mirror, the show had passed me by. I still know him as a Guardian columnist, a fellow contributor to the now-defunct 10 O'Clock Live, the presenter of an annual review year and the husband of Keriou Hoq. So in private I feel duty-bound to watch as many Black Mirror episodes as I can, from the first, "The National Anthem", in which a minister is forced to have sex with a pig, to the latest, "USS Callister", part of a series in which Jesse Plemons plays the malevolent captain of a spaceship and where, as always with Black Mirror, nothing is quite as it seems. It is wacky, clever

As The Wire's kingpin Stringer Bell, Londoner Idris Elba became a cult icon. Now back home, the Hackney boy is busier – and cooler –
